Diocesan Choral Festival – from Jean

The theme was Remembrance, and so the book had predominantly sombre music – much of it suitable to be used in Remembrance services in November. Every year the numbers attending go down, reflecting the diminishing number of people in choirs, but the Festival still has much to offer musically and remains a wonderful link – much to be valued – between the churches and with our cathedral.

Postscript from Sue: I found it a very moving service this year and especially enjoyed the playing of Nimrod on the organ, part-way through the service. At the end the new Dean spoke very warmly to us all, asking us to convey their love back to our parishes and to be assured that the cathedral was there for us.
